Global Network for Advanced Management Expands Reach to Six Continents with Three New Member Schools in Australia, Italy, and Kenya

Three distinguished business schools have joined the Global Network for Advanced Management, a network of top business schools committed to educating global leaders. The three new members are SDA Bocconi School of Management, Bocconi University, in Milan, Italy; Strathmore Business School in Nairobi, Kenya; and UNSW Business School in Sydney, Australia.

The Global Network now encompasses 32 schools on six continents. By leveraging network efficiencies, using new technologies, building strong institutional and personal relationships, and operating with a minimum of bureaucracy, the Global Network is having a transformational effect on students, member schools, management education, and beyond.

Each member school contributes unique academic strengths and perspectives on the highly interconnected global economy to the benefit of all participants. The three new schools represent not just geographic expansion, but also a strategic advancement for the network as a whole by adding vital connections with the high-tech manufacturing and fashion center of Northern Italy, the fast-moving and fast-growing markets of East Africa, and the increasingly influential Asia Pacific region. Security Analysis Prize Finalists Announced

Four teams from Global Network for Advanced Management schools have been selected as finalists for the Global Network Investment Competition's Security Analysis Prize.

The finalists are Boom and Pink Capital, both from School of Management, Fudan University; Alpha-Omega Investments from NUS Business School; and Incatraz Investments from INCAE Business School. The winner and runner-up for the Security Analysis Prize will be chosen on March 1, based on the teams' virtual presentations before a panel of judges. During a videoconference, each team will present the case for an investment portfolio assembling stocks from its home country. Winners are chosen based the quality of their investment thesis and research, how they fare during the question and answer session, and their presentation skills.

This year's judges include James Chanos, the founder and managing partner of Kynikos Associates LP; John Glass, managing director in equity research at Morgan Stanley; Rob Pohley, portfolio manager and founder of Samlyn Capital; and Eddie Tam, CEO and CIO of Central Asset Investments. The pitch competition will take place on March 1, 8:30 - 11 a.m. EST in the US. View the competition live at som.yale.edu/stock-pitch.

Seventeen Schools to Participate in the March 2018 Global Network Week

Seventeen schools and approximately 750 students will participate in the upcoming March 12-16 Global Network Week. Participating students who post about their experiences are encouraged to tag them with the #GNW2018 so that we can add them to the Global Network Tumblr.

Corporate Diplomatic Skills, Entrepreneurship and Global Resources are Themes of Global Network Courses

Students from 16 schools are enrolled in one of three Global Network Courses offered this term. IE Business School, FGV-EAESP and Yale SOM are offering courses on International Entrepreneurship, Political Strategies of Multinational Companies and Natural Capital: Risks and Opportunities in Global Resource Systems. The courses are an opportunity for students to work with faculty and students from other schools and to tap expertise across the network.

Global Network Deans Meet at HKUST

Global Network Deans and Directors met at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology Business School on December 4 and 5 to discuss new and ongoing network initiatives.

The attendees discussed issues including criteria for network membership, governance of the network, student engagement, and prospects for further collaboration and partnerships. Launched in 2012, the Global Network for Advanced Management includes 29 leading business schools from diverse countries and at different stages of development. A common purpose, though, is to give their students, faculty and alumni a fuller understanding of economic conditions and challenges around the world.

Professor Tam Kar Yan, Dean of HKUST Business School, said he was exceptionally pleased to see that almost 40 deans and senior administrators from member schools were able to participate. Read more.
